RABBI'S COLUMN

Our Light Dispels Darkness

By now, all of us have had time to digest the incredible devastation that we experienced recently – in one week, we saw suffering caused by seemingly disturbed adherents to the false god of “right by might” and another apparently caused by random factors associated with good people just doing their jobs. In one, the devastation wrought by a violent act seemed senselessly preventable – a willing choice of adults who should (and once did) know better; the other, the devastation wrought by a violent act that seemed out of human control. Like most extreme situations, I believe that each event’s backstory will one day come into clearer focus to yield a far more distorted truth.

Life is messy. In fact, it is far messier than often we are willing to admit. As human beings, we simultaneously crave both boundaries and boundlessness. We like a combination of rigidity and flexibility when it comes to living our daily lives. After all, we are an uneasy compact of both logic and emotion. We only need to look at our own evolving religious civilization to see this clearly: Judaism is rife with clarifications of our laws and traditions – for each rule there are many refinements and exceptions.

No matter what we do, however, we cannot escape our sense of despair when too many rules – human made or seemingly universal – are broken. We use rules to guide our thoughts, our decisions, our behavior. So, it is reasonable that we are deeply disturbed by an inability to find firm ground on which to stand. It is not uncommon for us to seek harmony in a world of variables and confusion. This is the source of our need to bring order to our lives. One might even venture to say that doing so brings Godliness into our lives. And yet, compassion, something that would call for a suspension or breaking of rules, is a most central aspect of our understanding of God’s nature and something to be emulated.

That said, how do we face the violence in our lives or in the world in general without sinking into despair, without declaring human beings as evil, or the world as without redeeming value; how do we avoid cynicism and a hollow, jaded sadness? It is to see the world for what it is and not measure it only against our vision of what it could be (or should be). I am not suggesting that we abandon our vision of a better world but I am suggesting that we need multiple methods to arrive at a true measure.

When we look at the world around us we see both chaos and order, both suffering and pleasantness, both ugliness and beauty. We must remember one truth: Life is created before it is received. When we make the decision that our participation is needed to make our own lives and even the whole world a better place, then we begin not only to heal our lives and our world but also ourselves. It is not a cliché to adhere to the belief that we are the agents of goodness in our world. It is a simple truth: When we do good, then the world is made more good.

Let us remember the evidence of the power of such faith and its reflection in acts of loving kindness (gemilut hasadim) in the world: Whenever there is a tragic event, there are those who rush toward the brokenness to contain it, to reduce it, to heal it. It is light that conquers darkness in our world and we should not forget that. How can we? Though it takes time, every night we are blessed with proof: Even our eyes adjust to the darkness to allow us to see the dimmest light. Light can never be conquered, only delayed.

May your eyes adjust to see the light in your life and in the world around you and may you be blessed with the strength to share that light with the world.

BINGO Returns

Our long-standing summer tradition of hosting Bingo for the kids will kick off on Thursday, July 11, and will continue for seven Thursday evenings from 7 - 8:30 p.m. until August 22. The 2013 season is made possible because of the extremely generous donation from Dr. Frank Kern to cover the expenses, and because Jamie Satz has once more graciously agreed to MC the program. Jamie is fantastic with the children, but she needs assistance. Call the office to volunteer!!! It will make your heart happy.

Simply Shirley . . .

Welcome to my fellow readers

The April book club met to discuss "The Aviator's Wife," which is a worthwhile story containing a history of Charles Lindburgh's life, both as the celebrated aviator as well as the very interesting person he was. Actually it is the story of his wife and her life with Charles. This was a very interesting book to read and made for a wonderful discussion at our book club.

Our next book club will be on May 20th at 1 p.m. and the book to be discussed is The Monuments Men by Robert Edsel.

Please know you are all welcome to join us. Please contact me at 609-266-8599 or ssmorgan3@verizon.net.

Spring weather has finally arrived! Be sure to take time to look at all the beautiful flowers and trees which have started to bloom.
